Medieval Stone

Feature Name : Cuthbert, the water butt website code 533

High on the tower of St Cuthbert's street church in Wells, this Gargoyle serves as a spout to throw rainwater clear of the stonework, the water pouring from his, well, you can guess from where!
Yet another indication of how, in mediaeval churches, the sacred and the profane often sat cheek by jowl.
Can be used as a fountain or, to direct the rainwater into your butt, pardon the pun.
Our Medieval range has been inspired by bygone craftsmen and will bring wit and form to your garden that will quickly settle in and look as though it's been there forever!
Created from reconstituted stone, the weathering and distressing techniques employed in the finishing of these pieces ensure that you will not tell them from the genuine article they are taken from.
